DUCK HUNTING ENDS SOON IN 7 STATES;
LAWS SUMMARIZED IN NEW BULLETIN

Open seasons on waterfowl will close in the middle of November in 7 States, hunters are reminded by the Bureau of Biological Survey, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

November 11 marks the close of the season in Michigan, Minnesota, North Dakota, Wisconsin, and Wyoming. The season in Nebraska ends on November 14 and in Iowa on November 18.

Restrictions placed on game-bird shooting, the Bureau points out, have as their ultimate goal the conservation of wildlife, and sportsmen are urged to cooperate in the enforcement of regulations, which are designed to perpetuate their sport.

Conservationists desiring detailed information on seasons and game-law provisions in other States, the Bureau suggests, will find it in Farmers' Bulletin 1742 entitled "Game Laws for the Season 1934-35", published by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. In this publication the Biological Survey has presented a complete summary of the game laws in all States, in Alaska, Canada, Mexico, and Newfoundland, as well as an interpretation of what has been done, and what is being planned by the Government in the national program of wildlife restoration, which involves the expenditure of eight and a half million dollars in purchasing, improving, and administering refuges. The bulletin, a 38-page publication, can be obtained at 5 cents a copy from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C.
